House approves MX

WASHINGTON (AP)—The House delivered a slender, hard-fought victory to President Reagan on Tuesday by voting to approve spending $1.5 billion for 21 more MX nuclear missiles. The president had tied approval of the weapon to the success of the U.S.-Soviet arms control talks.

The vote—the first of two the House will take this week—marked a major reversal for Democratic Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. and other House leaders who had worked hard to defeat the MX.

The vote was 219-213, with 158 Republicans and 61 Democrats voting for the missile. Voting against were 189 Democrats and 24 Republicans.

The margin was far closer than predicted by both opponents and supporters of the 10-warhead weapon, and O'Neill said he would try again on a second vote Wednesday or Thursday.

"Certainly we are going to try and switch it around," he said.

"It comes down to the fact that a lot of conservatives in my party will have to look at the price tag," the speaker said. "That's the only argument we've got out there."

But the cost of the MX was a major factor in Tuesday's MX debate, and there appeared little likelihood that the result would be reversed.

Reagan won many Democratic converts during an intensive White House lobbying campaign by saying that without the MX, the Geneva arms control talks, which began two weeks ago, would be unlikely to succeed.

Critics argued that the 10-warhead weapons are so vulnerable that they would be destroyed in the first wave of a Soviet nuclear attack.

A second House vote, probably on Wednesday, is required for final, formal congressional approval. But Tuesday's vote was decisive and means that Reagan will be able to continue toward his ultimate goal of building and installing 100 MXs in existing underground Minuteman missile silos in Nebraska and Wyoming.

In identical 55-45 votes last week, the Senate approved freeing $1.5 billion for the 21 MXs.

After merger opposition

Dean decides to keep job

By Mark Mattern
Staff Writer

Julius A. Elias, dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, decided Tuesday to withdraw his resignation following a special faculty meeting of his college in the Mathematical Sciences building.

Anthony T. DiBenedetto, vice president for academic affairs, called the meeting at the request of faculty members to reconsider four motions passed during a College of Liberal Arts and Sciences faculty meeting on March 5, 1985.

The motions were rescinded by the nearly 230 faculty members in attendance.

The motions concerned the formation of a special committee which would in effect, result in undermining Dean Elias in his "efficient use of scarce resources" as outlined in the 1983 university document "opportunity for the 80's."

The document which Elias calls "the master plan" is aimed at improving the quality of students in the department despite an inadequate budget. This could include the closing of a department and the merging of its laboratories with other Liberal Arts departments.

The Department of Biobehavioral Sciences was apparently being considered for a merger into the Psychology Department. "We are not closing down programs or fields of study. This is merely a reconstruction," DiBenedetto said. "There is no analogy between the Torrington Branch and the matter at hand."

Elias sees things differently. "The faculty voted for the committee so decisions would never be reached on these matters," he said. It was a stalling tactic. For the first time in my 11 years as dean I found myself receiving instructions from the faculty. The March 5th meeting was very small with no more than 35 faculty members in attendance."

Elias believes those in attendance had one point of view concerning the possible changes in departments and were, for that reason, able to propose the four motions unopposed.

59 students will run for USG positions

By Peter Corjulo
Staff Writer

A seat on the Undergraduate Student Government next year is the goal of 59 students, according to the USG elections committee.

Committee chairman Pat Gawkins today released a list of the students who have submitted letters-of-intent, and said that all the names have been approved for placement on the ballot.

Eligibility requirements include undergraduate standing and a grade point average of at least 2.0, but the elections committee can't check into these for verification because it is not able to go into student records. If an elected representative later fails to meet eligibility requirements he will be forced to resign immediately.

Gawkins added that candidates are not required to live in the areas they want to represent.

This year's slate of 59 candidates is the largest in recent history. In 1984, there were 42 candidates; in 1983, 26; and in 1982, 35.

There are six candidates running without opposition; one from Alumni, one from Buckley, one from McMahon, one from Shippee, and one from West.

Of those, 5 are current USG members: John Jee, John Kaiser,

USG comparisons are inappropriate

By Paul Thiel
Asst. Managing Editor

The Undergraduate Student Government, while pursuing its second fee increase in three years, has distributed advertisements that can be misleading, the Daily Campus learned Tuesday.

The advertisement in question is a flyer distributed by USG that compares student activity fees for student governments at state universities in New England. Listed are the largest public universities in each of the New England states and the corresponding student fee. UConn's $8 per student, per semester charge is the lowest.

The problem is with the comparisons. No two student activity fees are the same, and no two student governments have the same responsibilities to their students. UConn's fee is the lowest because the USG has the least responsibility of any of the schools listed, according to Daily Campus findings.

For instance, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is listed as charging each student $48 per semester. Out of that money, $22 goes to funding the UMass shuttlebus system, while $3 is earmarked for concerts and other money is distributed to various groups.

Stated at the bottom of the flyer, is: "USG's fee, if increased to $15.00 a semester for fall of 1986, would still be the lowest of the fees listed here."

Which is true, except the issue is basically that student governments can't be compared in the simplified manner the USG is using, since they all have different responsibilities.

Even Goetz can't keep rats from the subways

Right after Bernard Goetz shot four nasty young men on a New York subway train many people expressed disapproval because they feared that his example would touch off a wave of vigilante justice. Ordinary citizens would soon be whipping out blazing pistols every time a surly youth looked at them the wrong way. Bullets would whistle through the subway cars and the bodies of the innocent, as well as the obnoxious, would fill the aisles.

At the other extreme were the many who believed that what Goetz did was wonderful because it would have long-range social benefits. From now on, thugs who ride the subway would think twice before menacing decent people, because some other meek soul might blow holes in them.

So, what's happened? For that answer, I offer the recent experience of a woman named Merrie Star, who lives in New York.

Last Wednesday, at about 7 p.m., Merrie boarded a train for a ride from Brooklyn to lower Manhattan.

The train was crowded, but in a few moments she noticed four young people—two females and two males, about 17.

They were hard to overlook because one of them was carrying an object that was unusual, even on a New York subway.

It was a live, black rat.

"They were carrying it by the tail. And they were amusing themselves by swinging it toward people, right at their faces and frightening them.

"They were moving around the car with the thing, thrusting it at people, and they were turning what they were doing into a sick game.

"What they would do is crowd together, the four of them. Then they would separate, and nobody knew which one of them had the rat. But one of them would have it hidden under his or her coat.

"They'd all go up to different people and taunt them. They'd ask them if they wanted to see the rat, if they wanted to pet it.

"Then the one with the rat would pull it out and drop it on somebody's lap or shoulder."

They dropped a live rat on people?

"Yes. It was terrible. I've been riding the subways for a long time, but it was the most terrible thing I've seen so far.

"When they dropped it, the rat would run around on the floor of the car.

"Some people were screaming and pulling up their legs. Then the four of them would catch it and start their sick game over again.

What does this one incident tell us?

For starters, it tells us that the New York subways are not loaded with Bernard Goetzes, just waiting for an excuse to say: "Make my day."

Had there been a Goetz-type on that train, I assume that he would have responded to a live rat being dangled under his nose. No jury would convict somebody who explained: "I aimed at the rat. The kid happened to be standing behind it."

Merrie's experience also tells us that Goetz's quick trigger didn't make much of an impression on New York's considerable moron population. Anybody who drops a live rat in the lap of a stranger has to have an abiding faith in the timidity of his fellow man.

So, while New Yorkers still debate the right and wrong of the Goetz case, life on the subway returns to normal.

Next week, maybe snakes?

Hardhats hold demonstration

HARTFORD (AP)—Hundreds of hard-hatted union members descended on the Capitol at noontime Tuesday to dramatize their opposition to a bill they say would cost them a fortune in lost wages.

"We've worked hard all our lives to build up standards, and they reward us by taking away our dollars," shouted William J. O'Brien, president of the Greater Hartford-New Britain Building Trades Council, through a bullhorn. "We aren't going to let 'em, are we."

"No!" the hardhats thundered back.

Under current law, that wage must be paid for any new construction project costing more than $50,000 and any remodeling job costing more than $10,000

Turnpike needs new lanes

HARTFORD (AP)—The co-chairmen of the General Assembly's Transportation Committee called Tuesday for the construction of breakdown lanes along some sections of the Connecticut Turnpike to help the public and police.

"The state police say it is dangerous to pull over motorists who speed or otherwise break the law on I-95 because there is just no room," said Sen. Michael L. Morano, R-Greenwich, committee co-chairman.

Rep. Elinor F. Wilber, R-Fairfield, the House chairwoman of the committee, said the Department of Transportation had been asked to determine where emergency breakdown lanes could be added along the highway.

Wilber and Morano said they were most concerned over the stretch of the turnpike between the New York border and New Haven.

"The conditions of I-95 are discouraging," said Mrs. Wilber. "The public is in danger, the police are in danger."

Day-care is a nightmare

NEW HAVEN (AP)—Forty-seven states do not meet minimal standards for staffing day-care centers for infants, a new study at Yale University maintains.

High ratios of infants to adults, minimal qualifications for staff and little if any training for workers at day-care facilities were cited as detrimental to the development of youngsters in the report from Yale's Bush Center in Child Development and Social Policy.

"This study only looks at licensed day-care facilities, which makes the situation look better than it really is," said Edward F. Zigler, director of the center and co-author of the report.

Weicker proposes new gas tax

WASHINGTON (AP)—A new gasoline and diesel fuel tax that would reach the 30-cent-a-gallon level after three years was proposed Tuesday by Sen. Lowell P Weicker Jr., R-Conn., as a means of reducing the federal deficit while promoting energy conservation.

Under the Weicker plan, the tax would go up a dime a gallon for each of the next three years until it reached its maximum at 30 cents.

But unlike the existing federal motor fuel tax, Weicker's tax would not go to build highways and pay for mass transit.

Weicker said half of the money from his levy would be earmarked specifically for reducing the federal deficit, while the other half would go into the general federal treasury.

The plan, Weicker said, would raise $51.4 billion in the three years in which it was taking effect and would then generate more than $25 billion a year in new dollars.

U.S. deficit keeps growing

By The Associated Press

The U.S. budget deficit is running 11.7 percent ahead of last year's pace thanks to a $20.8 billion shortfall in February, the Treasury Department says.

The Federal Reserve Board's policy-making arm, meanwhile, is scheduled to meet today to plot credit strategy for the weeks ahead. Many analysts are betting the committee will vote to maintain its current monetary stance.

And the major U.S. auto manufacturers said their combined mid-March sales rose 5 percent form a year earlier, bolstered by cut-rate financing and other incentives offered by some of the companies.

The February spurt in the budget deficit compared with a $6.4 billion shortfall in January.

Rape dismissal reversed

PITTSBURGH (AP)—A judge who dismissed a rape charge against a man because the 13-year-old alleged victim arrived late for court has reversed his decision following courthouse protests and of public criticism.

"I think it's terrific," Carol McCullough, president of the South Hills Chapter of the National Organization of Women, said Monday after Judge J. Quint Salmon reinstated the rape charge against Geoffrey Adams, 27, of Pittsburgh.

"The attorneys are reviewing the jammed up trial list to determine when the case can be retried," Salmon said. "It will be retried as early as possible."

Sa: I'll help slow drug flow

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP)—Khun Sa, the notorious "opium warlord" of Burma, says he is willing to help the United States and Thailand suppress the illicit narcotics trade, the Bangkok Post reported today.

The English-language daily said he made the offer in a recent interview by radio from his stronghold in Burma opposite Thailand's Chiang Rai province.

"...my reputation has been damaged by the narcotics trade. There must be other means to find money, and we are looking for those means," the paper quoted Khun Sa saying.

The paper also quoted him as claiming that there were no opium fields or heroin factories in areas under his control. It did not elaborate on his purported offer of help to U.S. and Thai officials.

USSR says major was spying

MOSCOW (AP)—The Soviet Union said Tuesday that a U.S. Army major shot and killed in East Germany was spying on forbidden ground and that the United States is spreading a "deliberately false version" of the incident.

The United States says Maj. Arthur D. Nicholson Jr. was on a legitimate mission, in an unrestricted area, and the shooting was tantamount to murder. A U.S. Embassy spokesman in Moscow called the report by the official Tass news agency an attempt "to justify an action that just cannot be justified."

Michael Burch, a U.S. assistant defense secretary, said in Luxembourg, "When we find the Soviets, even in restricted areas, we simply take their cameras away and send them home. We don't shoot them."

A Soviet sentry shot Nicholson on Sunday near the East German town of Ludwigslust about 30 miles from the West Germany border. U.S. officials said Nicholson's driver was prevented from going to the wounded man with his first aid kit, and the major was left to die without medical attention.

Hungary reforms praised

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP)—Soviet Politburo member Grigori V. Romanov today expressed approval of Hungarian economic reforms and indicated the Kremlin sought similar practics.

"Hungary has built a new world in close unity with the Soviet Union," Romanov said in addressing Hungary's 13th Communist Party Congress. "All that has been accomplished proves the correctness of our chosen road."

Romanov supported economic pragmatism, believed favored by the new Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Proceeds of campus play to aid starving children in Ethiopia

By Matt Cookson
Wire Editor

The Board of Trustees voted last week to donate all profits form an April 25 performance of the play "Top Girls" to aid starving children in Ethiopia

"It was an enthusiastic approval, and the board voted unanimously for it," said Harry Hartley, vice president for finance and administration.

Tickets will be $10 for the play which runs from April 11th to April 25th at 8 p.m. in the Harriet S. Jorgensen Theater. Profits from the performance could reach $4,000. "If we could get $3,000 to $4,000 I'd be very happy," said dramatic arts professor David Heilweil, who made the proposal.

The idea for the donation came form a suggestion made by a student during a simulated project in Heilweil's advertising and publicity class. The idea of donating profits from play became a project for the class. "We felt we wanted to do something realistic and worthwhile," Heilweil said.

Heilweil and 13 students in the class are responsible for advertising, public relations, and circulation. "The students will get to know the limitations of publication and advertising," Heilweil said.

The students have already printed posters, and have distributed over 500 fliers around campus. They are planning to send letters to Mansfield residents to promote the fund-raising effort.

South campus dorm, Crawford, to go co-ed this fall

By Ron Harner
Campus Correspondent

South campus' last all female, four-unit dorm will go co-ed when Crawford makes the switch in the fall of 1985.

Crawford B and D have voted to change their dorms from the all female tradition, going instead with a male floor between two female floors.

"I think this will really change the atmosphere around here", said Teresa Boyd, a resident of Crawford D. The general attitude of the dorm is that this is a postitve step for both social and safety reasons

"It will get rid of that old Crawford tradition", said sophomore resident Sally Anne Musco.

Though the general concensus felt that the male addition was a good move, not everyone was delighted.

"With the addition of guys come higher fee bills, more damage and more noise", said resident Paty McCurry.

This, traditionally had been true, which may be one reason why some men will be moved from their present dorm into Crawford. It is rumored that two wings of Stowe will be involved in the switch.

Jackie Side, Associate director of residential life, would not comment on the possibility of Stowe going co-ed until she could speak with the students, but said, "No one will be forced to make the move". She added, "We're not changing any lifestyles, just Crawford".

Robert Piscitelli, Martha Brackley, and Lynn LaMonica. There are 26 positions on the assembly.

The Daily Campus is planning a supplement featuring comments from the candidates, according to John Paradis, editor-in-chief. The supplement will be printed on Tuesday, April 2, and will feature statements taken from a questionnaire.

"This will give students at least a nominal chance to learn about the people running," Paradis said.

Elections are scheduled for April 2nd and 3rd. Commuters will be able to vote on either day, residents on April 3rd only.

Dean Elias keeps position

The meeting Tuesday was attended by more than half of the faculty in the college. They had been informed about the implications and repercussions of the motions, Elias said.

"After weighing the facts, they supported me," Elias said. "It amounts to a vote of confidence. I'm encouraged to keep up the fight."

Professor Victor H. Denenberg of the Biobehavioral Department is protrayed as the faction leader in favor of the motions. This is indicated in a letter by professors William S. Laughlin and Albert B. Harper of that department which was distributed at the meeting. Professor Denenberg felt that the letter distorted his role in the matter.

Denenberg solicited the advice of Jordan E. Kurland, associate general secretary of the American Association of University Professors the professor's union, to find out if the union has a national policy concerning the dissolving of a department. Kurland said there was, but the discussion included in Tuesday meeting covered the due process of the policy, Denenberg said.

Kurland also said that he could not find a basis for the grievance. He suggested the matter should be handled by UConn officials.

Denenberg said the outcome of Tuesday's meeting of the motions would lead to the dissolution of the department. "The administration wants it to happen effective July 1," he said. "The disadvantage of this will be in the ability to attract graduate students to UConn in this field."

"Professor Denenberg was repudiated by the faculty today," Elias said. "I spend a lot of time with the AAUP on policy. As far as the AAUP on campus is concerned, I'm clear."

"I handed in a letter of resignation to Mr. DiBenedetto," Elias said. "Today, after the meeting, I handed in a letter withdrawing the resignation. It's up to him of course which of those to accept."

DiBenedetto said he would not accept the resignation letter.

Fee comparisons are misleading

endum shows majority support for the increase, and the UConn Board of Trustees passed the measure, the USG fee would be raised from $8 to $15.

"We felt it (the comparison) was justified because the shuttlebus is a student government function," said Jay Stolfi, USG chairperson for public relations, concerning the UMass example.

Stolfi said the differences were significant, but that they balanced out between schools. "For instance, some schools pay for the staff of the student government, but we pay our own," Stolfi said. "And some schools pay their people (student representatives)."

"We picked schools we felt have pretty much the same responsibilities we (USG) have," Stolfi said.

University of Maine students are charged $17.50, about a 25 percent of the money goes toward providing students with legal services, and another 25 percent is used for entertainment activities the independently-funded Student Union Board of Governors would sponsor here. In addition, the UMaine student organization pays their own staff.

"We were well aware of that (the comparisons)," said John Jee, USG asembly member. "We did look into it and we were a bit general."

In a third example, it was discovered Michigan State University charges students $4.50 per term, with three terms in an academic year. With that money, the MSU student government covers most of the funcitons of UConn's USG and BOB and provides student legal services.

UConn Jazz Ensemble and Ellen Rowe to perform at Von der Mehden

The big band sounds of The University of Connecticut Jazz Ensemble, directed by Ellen Rowe, will be heard at Von der Mehden Hall in a free program at 8:15 p.m. on March 28.

The 22-piece band will perform new works and jazz standards by composers such as Sammy Nestico, Bob Mintzer, Thad Jones, Gino Vanelli, Juan Tizol, Richard Laion, Johnny Mandel, Matt Harris, and Ellen Rowe.

Rowe, a recognized jazz pianist, composer and arranger, teaches at the University. In 1982 she received the "Best Original Composition" award in a Downbeat Magazine competition. She is an arranger/transcriber for Marian McPartland and is orchestrating an album for jazz bassist Harvie Swartz on the Gramavision label. In 1983, Rowe's jazz quintet, Joyspring, won the Women's Jazz Festival Combo competition and was featured in Women's Jazz Festival concerts in New York City and Kansas City.

TRULY AN EVENING OF ELEGANCE

Library exhibit traces beginnings of women's labor

Three exhibits, each depicting a component of the theme of women, work and fashion in industrial America, opened March 16 at the Homer Babbidge Library.

A photographic exhibition from the Smithsonian Institution titled, "Perfect in Her Place: Women at Work in Industrial America," will be complemented by costumes and accessories from the UConn M. Estella Sprague Collection.

Twenty miniature mannequins dressed in the high fashion costumes of the Victorian and Edwardian eras also will be on display. Titled, "Les Petites Dames de Mod," it was created by John Burbidge.

Burbidge will present a lecture on his collection at the Library tonight at 7:30 p.m.

Exhibits will be on display through April 27.

Burbidge, a designer of wedding gowns, has designed the mannequins and meticulously sewn to scale the costumes, illustrating the history of women's haute Victorian and Edwardian fashion. Because of the scale of the mannequins, the collection enables the viewer to capture at a glance a varied and splendid era in the history of dressmaking.

The "Perfect in Her Place" exhibit is a project supported in part by a grant from the Connecticut Humanities Council, the state committee of the National Endowment for the Humanities.

The exhibit traces the contribution of women's labor from the 19th century through World War I.

Using images of textile workers, button makers, watch assemblers, munitions workers and many more, the exhibit documents the diversity and drudgery of work women have been called to do. The accompanying labels make use of quotations from contemporary publications.

A free 22-page illustrated exhibition catalogue will be available courtesy of Aetna Insurance Co.

The Sprague Collection of costumes and accessories in the UConn School of Family Studies includes many items of museum quality. It is used primarily for study and research purposes. For this exhibition, costumes and accessories from the period 1815-1915 have been selected by curator Dr. Patricia Trautman to illustrate the dress of working women as they are portrayed in the photographic exhibit.

Credit card cheating

Other than violent crimes against people, of which the costs cannot be measured, white-collar crime in the United States makes everyday stree crime look like petty larceny.

Unfortunately, UConn may not be removed from such graft. Auditors recently spot checked 52 campus departments and found apparent credit card abuse. In one instance, they found 1,200 calls billed to one card.

Officials here say the phone calls were made by the New England Research Application Center, which relies heavily on the telephone to do its business. This may be true, yet the audit also indicated that some unathorized individuals may be using credit cards and some university employers are apparently making calls from their homes and billing them to the university.

If the credit cards were used to make calls on official business, there would be no reason for alarm. But the fact that over 100 calls were made from employee's homes may be too significant a number to believe that there is no misuse of the cards.

In any case, the university should be more careful about who gets credit cards and how they use them. And it shouldn't take an apparent violation for the university to conduct an investigation. The use of credit cards should be continually supervised.

University officials should make it clear to all those who use credit cards that it will not tolerate any misuse. It should be made clear to those who are dumb enough to think they can beat the system that they can't go on cheating without getting caught.

Enforcing codes of ethics is the real issue. The status of ethical conduct at a university rarely occupies a major place on the agendas of administrative meetings.

If the university does find that there has been abuse of their telephone credit cards, it would be quite distressing, especially since it centers around people in academia who are supposedly role models.

After all, if we can't trust the academic community which has traditionally valued honesty and decency, then who can we trust?

Another starry night to remember

Without a doubt, Jimmy Stewart provided the suspense at this year's Academy Awards. Would Jimmy survive his film clips long enough to collect his life achievement Oscar? The impressive catalogue almost proved too much for septuagenarian Cary Grant who hasn't looked so confused since realizing he was married to Dyan Cannon.

Jimmy came through in fine form, however, except he committed one unforgivable faux pas. He actually thanked the millions of fans who have paid to watch him garble his lines on the silver screen over the last fifty years.

You could have heard a diamond stickpin drop when he hobbled off the Music Center stage. Prince thanking God is one thing, but acknowledging the audience? Out of respect for his sheer longevity, the glitterati applauded Stewart, but his uncalled for remark shook them to their very sequins.

wings sternly adjusting her cleavage. They liked me last year, Shirley was thinking. If I don't win again real soon, they may never ask me to present another award.

That's the rub, you see. Accepting is easy. They have to let you do that. But if you want to present one of those tiny statuettes or even be part of the show, you've got to be cool like Ryan O'Neal, frumpier than Glenn Close, a totally unknown Pia Zadora clone, or a colorful combination of all three.

Just who is Ann Reinking? Why wasn't Willie Nelson made to take a bath and hop into a tuxedo like everyone else? Does Apollonia always go out in nothing but a bikini top? And what was the mysterious mission that caused Agatha Christie reincarnate Angela Lansbury to accept Dame Peggy Ashcroft's Oscar?

The answer is Sir Michael Redgrave's funeral, of course. Daughter Vanessa was among

Fortunately for Charlton Heston and Ronald Reagan, most viewers had never heard of Nelson Mandela

Flub of the night, however, goes to Lord Larry Olivier who raised the hackles of four now forgotten producers by neglecting to mention the nominees before announcing Amadeus as best picture. Lord Larry appeared visibly rattled after a standing ovation and a Jack Lemmon intro that situated him somewhere between Olympus and Uranus. He mumbled a gracious thank you and hoped he wouldn't let everyone down. Well, he did, but nobody except the aforementioned seemed to mind.

Larry won an honorary Oscar himself back in 1981 and by his very presence last night, he earned another dubious distinction. In Cosa Nostra lingo, a life achievement Oscar is the proverbial kiss of death. If you have any doubts, try asking Henry Fonda or Charlie Chaplin.

Perhaps Jack Lemon was closer to the mark than he realized. Only a god who has been to Hades and back several times could keep turning up in L.A. year after year to receive and present awards the way Lord Larry has. Rumor has it he's haggling over a $10 million fee for a stagger-on cameo in George Romer's upcoming Noon of the Dead. It's to be set at a shopping mall in Calcutta, India, of course, and will also feature Ben Kingsley and the remains of Sir Ralph Richardson. The script is loosely based on a Stephan King adaptation of Rudyard Kipling's Gunga Din.

Most obvious falsehood in an acceptance speech? F. Murray Abraham claiming he wished Tom Hulce could share his award. Best performance? Hands down to former flying nun and television beach bunny Sally Field who sought a place in the hearts of her fellows when she screamed, "You like me! You like me!

Some reconsidered; others wondered why; but Shirley Maclaine merely waited in the the missing, too, but that didn't seem to upset anyone except the viewers in Red China who were watching their very first Oscar extravaganza. As far as the Academy is concerned, Vanessa's father's death was another badly timed move by the notoriously disrespectful Redgrave clan.

Sir Michael wasn't high enough on the list to get last year's Achievement accolade and he died recently to allow time to prepare a tribute. Unlike Peter Finch, he had accomplished nothing that would allow them to give him a posthumous tribute Oscar. Lynn will see justice done, however. She carries a lot of weight in Hollywood.

Some tributes were given all the same. Stevie Wonder won one and then had the nerve to pull a Marlon Brando/Jane Fonda/Vanessa Redgrave stunt and dedicate it to Nelson Mandela. Fortunately for Charlton Heston and Ronald Reagan, most viewers had never heard of Nelson Mandela, but you can be darn sure they know the imprisoned South African activist in Peking. That will probably earn Stevie a Panda when the Chinese Academy gives out its glory next spring. The competition will be stiff, though. Rumor has it the newly discovered Mozart will also be in the running.

The Academy promised a slick, well managed evening and that's exactly what it delivered. Anybody who spoke over 45 seconds had a hook waved at them from the wings and when time ran out Larry Olivier had the good sense to bring down the curtain. Now it's all over and what do we have? Another night wasted in front of the tube? No way. The Oscars have achieved what no one ever believed possible. They have put themselves into serious contention for an Emmy and that, after all, is what television is all about.

More Channels, More Junk:

It's time to correct Cable Vision

BOSTON-I didn't mind when they came and dug up the street. This was progress after all. Make way for cable TV.

The sight of the work-crews last fall was actually, I blush at the memory, exciting. We were living in an urban valley where pictures were intercepted by a full range or skyscrapers. We were living in a television land wasted by the limited number of channels. We were about to enter the wonderful world of video-choices.

In the first introductory-offer rush, we signed up for the entire package. Choices galore: 106 channels. Of course, 12 of them were reserved for future use. One was in Spanish, two of them in the language of high finance. But five of them had movies, two had weather, three had God, two more country music and there were dozens of others.

The whole thing was a curiosity at first. Flicking through the cable magazine alone was like going through a small-appliance catalog. Wow, look at that! An electric yogurt maker, an electric can opener, a battery-operated carving knife or toothbrush! The offers were so appealing I never thought that they might languish under the sink. Cable TV got a good reception in our home in more ways than one.

But now, after three months of living with it, I have come to realize what exactly cable television offers me: a much wider selection of things that I don't want to see.

Those of you in the cable-less half of TV households probably doubt that. What about the movies, you ask? Once, cable was sold to the public as the tool to break the networks' stranglehold. It was the way to allow a thousand geniuses to blossom. Now movies are the biggest hype. Cable creativity is a Hollywood rerun and a rerun of the Hollywood rerun.

But I will tell you about the movies. There are some 250 listed in my monthly cable guide, about five of them headliners, new to TV, two of them remotely of interest. Let us suppose for a moment that two people sit down with a bowl of homemade popcorn to watch one movie a month. At the top cable rate in our community, you have just spent about $55 to go to the movies. For the same price, it is possible to buy one babysitter, a two-star dinner, and a movie in a real live theater. If you pay an average monthly cable fee of $25 on the other hand, you could save up for a year, buy a VCR and then rent a movie you like, see it any time you like, for about $2 a night.

Of course, if you watch cable television seven hours a night, it's a bargain. But if you watch it seven hours a night, you're not a bargain.

I don't want to simply dismiss cable. I like my pictures without fuzz. C-Span is a political junkie's version of "You are There." Someday, they will be writing Ph.D. theses on the videos that play MTV.

But it was an MTV commercial that made me realize it was time to correct my cable vision. For 60 long seconds, a cast of hyperactive dancers plunged across the screen in perfect video style toward this startling, world-shattering, climactic message: THERE'S MORE NACHO CHEESE FLAVOR IN DORITOS! I could only think of all the carpenters and painters, all the dancers, all the dancing lessons, all the English classes, all the time and energy that had gone into communicating this Nacho-cheese announcement.

In the same sense, the basic scientific research, the manufacturing and programming and broadcasting of modern television has combined to bring "Three's a Crowd" into private homes. Now, a huge enterprise has laid thousands of mile of cable across the country in order to bring "Splash" into those same homes.

The concept behind 100 or more channels was that you could have it your way. That's about as common for cable viewers today as it is for fast-food lovers. Most of the cable channels find themselves competing for popularity--the largest number of viewers. They do it, the way the networks do, by offering a low common denominator.

At the end of the cable line, we don't have choices in the real sense of that word. We just have more TV. The picture is terrific, but the purpose is way out of focus.

Northern Irish don't want British help:

Why support Ulster– she doesn't want it?

To the Editor:

We wish to make some additional points about the crisis in Northern Ireland. After reading Michael Reilly's "Singing an old Irish song", (The Daily Campus, March 20, 1985) and Justin McCaffrey's letter to the editor, "Leperchaun logic biased," (The Daily Campus, March 25, 1985), we, as British students, feel that they do not have their facts straight.

Since the 1930's, the British government has spent an incredible amount of money on Northern Ireland. Supporting Northern Ireland cost 48 million pounds in 1956 to 94 million pounds annually in the early 1970's. Today, the sky is the limit. Supporting Northern Ireland cost 1.3 billion pounds in 1983 with an additional 140 million pounds for army costs.

Ulster is a terror-stricken province in Northern Ireland which has seen a 75 percent loss of growth in Ulster alone. This can be attributed to IRA violence which has cost an estimated 3.4 billion pounds.

Every Ulster citizen, also, receives financially 50 percent more from the British treasury than a British citizen does. The British government, in addition, supports a Northern Ireland unemployment rate of 21 percent.

According to surveys published in the June 1984 Economist, the majority of citizens in Northern Ireland do not want British protection. But, despite this, the British government has tried to govern fairly between Catholic and Protestant factions. The surveys also showed that the majority of citizens in Northern Ireland want no North American Interference.

Were Reilly and McCaffrey aware of these facts, or did they simply choose to ignore them?

What will the fish think?

To the Editor:

A private Hartford firm, Bowers Hydroelectric, Inc., is proposing to lease the state owned recreational area at Eagleville Dam for the purpose of building a hydroelectric power plant. The land on which this power plant will be built is currently used for fishing and swimming. The waterfall there is a natural attraction enjoyed by large numbers of people who canoe, picnic, or just sunbathe in the state owned area, not to mention the esthetic enjoyment of the people who drive on Route 275 every day on their way to work at UConn or elsewhere.

If the proposed power plant is built, Eastern Connecticut will lose one of its most charming scenic areas. The Department of Environmental Protection on the power plant says that the waterfall will be non-existent 35 percent of the time—presumably during the summer and fall, the times of lowest mean flow and heaviest public use—and will be greatly reduced (presumably to a sad trickle) the rest of the time.

Picknickers and those driving by will see not a rural scene of waterfall and fishermen, but a garage like structure and ugly stone dam wall. Fishermen will find that their most frequently used areas are blocked off. Swimmers will find the same. Canoe clubs, which use the area as a start and end point for races, will find their parking facilities limited. What the fish will think only the fish know—unless you are reassured by DEP's optimistic assumption that only an unspecified percentage will be killed off by the power plant intake—and that those will only be the smaller (younger?) fish.

The proposed dam will not provide enough electricity to make any noticeable impact on Connecticut's needs. It will produce financial benefits for the would be developers—at considerable loss to the residents. It is incredible to think that the DEP could give their blessing to such a bare faced financial grab, but it has, in the form of a February, 1985 Environmental Impact Evaluation, which carefully neglects to mention that the areas that are to be removed from public use are precisely those used by the local swimmers and fishermen.

The evaluation also clearly states that the proposed loss of the waterfall is not significant. It may not be significant to the Hartford based developers, but it is significant to the many citizens of Coventry and Mansfield who are scheduled to be the big losers in this little game.

A public hearing on this proposal will be held by the DEP this Thursday, at 7:30 pm, at the Eagleville Fire Station at the corner of routes 32 and 275. All those concerned are invited to come and speak or to just listen to the testimony.

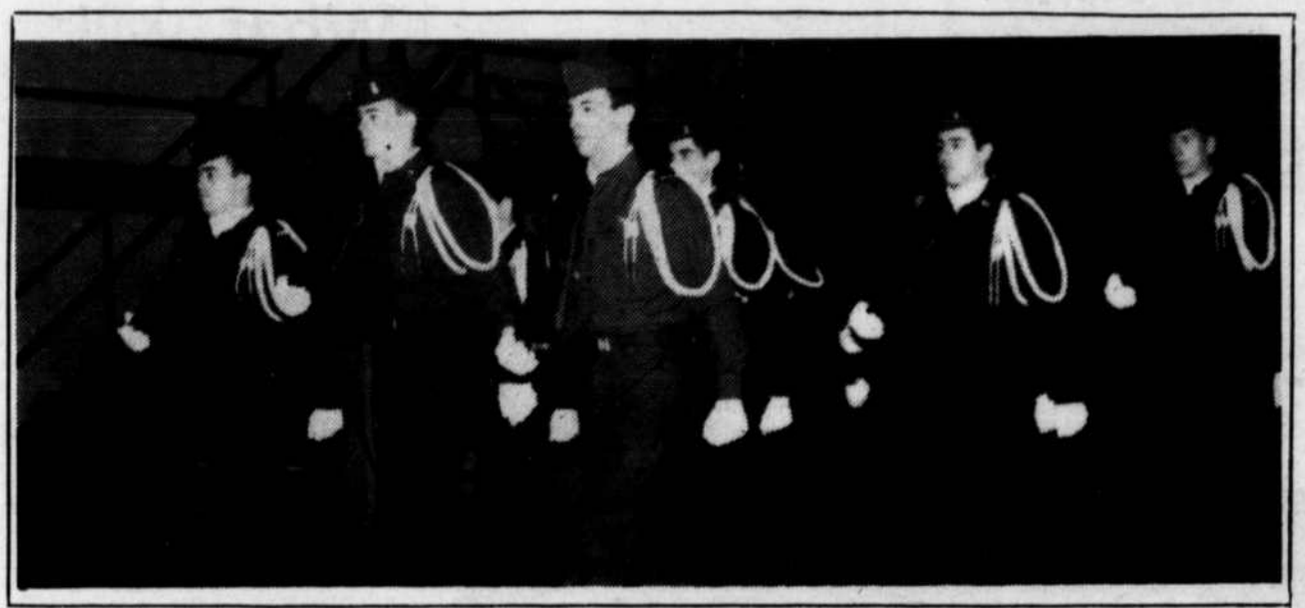
Air Force ROTC Drill Team readies for competition



Drill Team members practice timed marching skills.

The Drill Team, which consists of twelve UConn students and three students from Eastern is headed by Vito Addabbo and Patrick Cloutier. Their advisor is Air Force Captain Ronnie Shaw.

The team, which was begun in the spring of 1984, has participated in two local parades and has presented the American flag at home basketball games this season.

Members of the team must have a grade point average of 2.0 and must be enrolled in either the General Military Course (for freshmen and sophomores) or the Professional Officer Course (for juniors and seniors). Most of the team members are underclassmen.

"We started the Drill Team because we wanted to leave something that would be here two or three years down the road," said Addabbo. "We want to come back and see it flourishing taking national honors."

The Drill Team patterns itself after the U.S. Air Force Drill Team.

Personals

Moira-Happy Birthday to our favorite personal Haiter. May all your readers present you with appropriate gifts. You deserve them. Love your boss.

To our wonderful ad production manager. I was only kidding-don't be such a grump. An equally wonderfully AME.

To the girl who beeped at me Sat. afternoon-thanx for the compliment. The guy on the bike.

WE LOVE YOU MOIRA! HAPPY 22nd BIRTHDAY! LOVE ALWAYS, Erica, Cindy, Sheila, Renata, Anne!

Moira
Happy
Birthday!!!

TO THE RED HEADED RECEPTIONIST. Well it's finally your birthday...However, even with all of the advance warning I still forgot to get your present, so I guess i will just have to give you what you really want...The Brunette Ad REP. P.S. Only 109 shopping days left till the Brunette Ad Reps B-Day.

MOIRA-HAPPY BIRTHDAY! Havse a great day! How about dancing on the tables at Ted's or maybe something even wilder this time!! Haves a good one! Love, the Classified Ad. mge.

To Angel Fluff, Lets make this semester the best we've ever had. Let's also start building our future together! Love mr. Freckle.

J.M.S. Thanks so much for staying up this weekend. I had a fantastic time. Hope you did well yesterday despite it. L& S Forever-Heather.

To our Blind Dates on Friday night, we supplied the liquor this time. Now it's your turn! Please respond the girls on Ellsworth 7th.

To the classiest lady I've seen on this campus, wearing a grey jacket, plaid jump-dress, and camio ring on Monday-Student Union. I would like to see you Wed-6:00, Thursday 12:00-2:00, or Fri -1:00 in the SU Snackbar so that I can invite you to a classy dinner Thurs or Fri.

Dear Renee, Please be a friend, and be honest, cut out those smiles with nothing behind them. Thanx.

Wendy, (2nd Hale) when the moon is full and the stars are on their plight to stay alive, say I do and I will sing you a lullaby. Touch my skin as you touched my heart and you will find a reward in that. Have a joyous year, don't act too wild. Man on the Moon.

Okay, Hurley 3rd! Who forgot to recharge the port-o-gasm again?!

Kerry (Hartford 4th) Just thought I'd say "Thanks" for all our talks-but next time we're only going to talk about YOUR life! Celine

PATTY YOU'RE SO SEXY

Happy Birthday ED! (Hartford 2nd) You didn't think I'd forget did you? Well, like I've said so many times before, if you ever want to talk...take care, and have a swell birthday. With love, an old friend.

TO CB: Thanks for the great game of hoop Sunday. I was really impressed. But be careful from now on, O.K. crash? LUV Always Charlie P.S. don't worry about the car either!

Happy 21 st Birthday, CATHY! Hey Roomie, Try not to fall off any rocks or lofts today. I really don't feel like bringing you to the infirmary. Hope you're ready to celebrate kiddo! Love, Dodi

John: When it rains, it pours, but true friends somehow weather storms! I'll even lend you an umbrella next time if you wish! Thanks. Love, your true friend.

The Hanks curse-is it real or imagined? Live there at least two years and join the statistics of this strange phenomenon!

Happy Birthday to you. Happy Birthday to you. Happy Birthday my dear Reets, Happy Birthday to you! I hope you have a great day, honey! Love Maureen.

Reets-Happy Birthday to you. Happy Birthday to you, Happy Birthday dear Rita, Happy Birthday to you! Have a good one Honey! I love you-Love always, Dirk.

To the gorgeous blond I saw at the Oasis Cafe before break: Will I see you there again this Friday? Please respond, An Admirer.

To the pretty blonde in the tan Horizon (229-BUV) You drove away with my heart: Please return it through a personal. From "R" in the little red car.

BOB (Stowe B, 4th)-our eyes have met and those glances have contained such warmth and friendliness. i perceive you as being sensitive and understanding, a rarity nowadays. How would you like to meet someone like yourself? Please reply soon...(If you don't, whomever has captured your heart is lucky indeed...)

If you can't eat it..
Join it!
The Pepper Steak Fan Club.

To the two wild women of Brock. Poor Gil's will never be the same! But where is the coffee? And how much for a duck? Your fellow Friday morning conspirator. P.S. How high is the tally now?

To the guy in the white shirt at Dean's Office last Thursday night who "lives across from west" I would like to get to know you. If interested please reply and/or be at Dean's this Thursday night... the girl who asked you to slow dance.

Sigma Chi Pledges-Monday may have been cool, but last night was Hot as H. Hope you remember all we've tried to teach you. Don't let Lil Sig Magister Brag anymore-Have a GREAT WEEK

TO THE GUY WHO LEFT A "SECRET ADMIRER" MESSAGE ON MY BOARD 3/22, THE NIGHT OF THE HARTFORD 4TH FLOOR PARTY. HOW VERY SWEET! WHO ARE YOU? DO I KNOW YOU? PLEASE REPLY IN PERSONALS.

To the girl who took my drinking helmet at the Tacky Club party. - I'm lost without it! Please reply soon.

ANN B Rx MAJOR

HAVE A VERY HAPPY 22nd BIRTHDAY WITH ALL THE TRIMMINGS!
YOUR ROOMIE

P.S. UCONN SOCCER TEAM: LIU may have won the tournament; but, real winners have class. Here's to you! Michelle

Louie to Redmen: It's time to go for broke

NEW YORK (AP)—Coach Lou Carnesecca doesn't want St. John's to be just another Final Four team.

"I always wanted to get there," said Carnesecca, who will be making his Final Four debut after 17 years of coaching. "But it's not enough to get there. You want to stay there. Now we have to go for broke.

"We want a whack at the whole ball of wax. A lot of people are so happy to get there, they forget why they're there."

St. John's, winner of the West Regional title, will run into a familiar foe in its semifinal at Lexington, Ky., Saturday when it meets Big East Conference rival Georgetown.

No. 3 St. John's won its first meeting this season with the top-ranked Hoyas, halting Georgetown's 29-game winning streak when the two played at Landover, Md. Final score: 66-65.

Georgetown avenged the defeat, twice, the first time by 16 points at Madison Square Garden, and then by 12 points in the Big East Tournament finale.

Still, Carnesecca remains optimistic.

"If you look at the last two losses, you can see that we were not beaten badly," Carnesecca said. "We gave the games away. As much as they were good, we beat ourselves.

"We made mistakes. We may have concentrated too much on Georgetown center Patrick Ewing and forgot about the other guys."

At a news confernece, the St. John's coach said he might leave center Bill Wennington alone on Ewing more this time.

"He's played him as well as anyone around, and maybe we should let Ewing get his bundle and concentrate on stopping the others," Carnesecca said. "He's gonna get his anyway, right?"

Just before the Big East Tournament, Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim, whose Orangemen handed Georgetown its only other loss this season, said there was a gap between St. John's and Georgetown and the rest of the country. Now, Boeheim's convinced Georgetown is on a level by itself.

"If the last two games had been closer, it would have been a lot easier for St. John's," Boeheim said. "I think it's going to be difficult for them because of the last two games and the experience Georgetown had of getting there last year.

Tulane basketball player arrested

NEW ORLEANS (AP)—A member of the Tulane University basketball team and another Tulane student were under arrest Tuesday night, and two other Tulane basketball players were being sought by police, accused of fixing the outcome of at least two Tulane basketball games this season, authorities said.

Orleans parish District Attorney Harry Connick said at a surprise news conference Tuesday night that the four Tulane students were accused of violations of Louisiana's sports bribery law. The point shaving is alleged to have taken place in basketball games against Mississippi State and Memphis State.

John "Hot Rod" Williams, a senior and a member of the All-Louisiana college basketball team, was reported to be under arrest Tuesday night and en route from his hometown of Sorrento, La. to New Orleans.

A new Orleans television station reported Tuesday night that Williams and two other Tulane basketball players, David Dominque and Bobby Thompson, will be booked with two counts of sports bribery.

Search committee formed to select Balthaser replacement

By Jim Acton
Sports Editor

A search committee has been formed to select a women's basketball coach to replace Jean Balthaser, who retired last week. The committee comprises people from the university community.

Heading the committee is associate athletic director Pat Meiser, who will be overseeing the application and selection process. Meiser was a very successful women's basketball coach at Penn State.

Balthaser resigned last Monday, citing the need for a career change as her reason. She had been the head coach for five years and compiled a 52-88 overall record.

Joining Meiser on the committee are Tim Tolokan, director of media relations; Dee Rowe, assistant athletic director in charge of development; Phil Barry, athletic business manager; Pat Babcock, director of scheduling; Cathy Bochain, student assistant women's basketball coach and Dr. Anne Huckenbeck, assistant dean-School of Business.

According to Meiser, the committee began receiving applications last week and will accept them until April 23.

"After we receive all the applications, we will begin sorting through them and pick a set number of finalists," Meiser said. "Hopefully, we'll make a final choice before school lets out for the summer."

Meiser said that the committee has not yet set any definite criteria for selection, but she has at least one qualification in mind.

"We want someone who can be successful at UConn," Meiser said. "It won't be too hard to draw people who fit our needs. The Big East is attractive and women's basketball is drawing the highest salaries of any of the women's sports (on the national collegiate level).

A surprise committee member is Bochain. She is a member of Balthaser's 1984-85 staff and also a fifth year pharmacy major. She played guard on the team for four years.

"I feel Cathy is an excellent choice for the committee," Tolokan said. "She is an in-state athlete (Moosup, CT) and has been through the program as both a player and a coach. She has a good opinion of what it will take to improve the program."

Meiser said that she has already received many applications but expects the number to increase in the coming few weeks. This weekend is the NCAA finals for women's basketball and word will spread quickly of the UConn opening.

Tolokan agrees with Meiser that they will have no problem attracting top coaches from throughout the country. This is not only because of the Big East Conference but also through the construction of the new sports complex.

"If you look at the plans for the new facility, the women's program is getting a great deal of attention," Tolokan said. "The men's and women's basketball programs are receiving equal everything—right down to the square foot. It is a very attractive situation for someone to come into."

There are also no powerhouses in the conference and it would not take a total revamping of the UConn program to thrust the team into the league's spotlight.

Tolokan said that by making the final decision early in May, the new coach would have a chance to talk with the team and put them on some sort of summer program. It would give the coach a jump on the next season and allow for a more comfortable transition.

UConn entertains 7'-4" English recruit

By Jim Acton
Sports Editor

If you were trying to lure a top basketball recruit to UConn, what would you do to make his short stay on campus memorable?

Well, you would probably take him to see the Hartford Civic Center and then wine and dine him at an expensive downtown restaurant. Maybe you'd take him on a tour of the campus with stops at the library, field house and a few dorms.

To wrap things up you might want to let him experience some of the thrilling nightlife at UConn and let him eat at one of the university's large dorm cafeterias that's right—a cafeteria).

These are exactly the things that the basketball coaching staff did for Alan Bannister, the 7-foot-4 recruit from Manchester, England. Bannister wrapped up a three-day stay on campus Tuesday and headed back home last night.

The short visit included such stops as the state Capitol, the Civic Center and various Hartford landmarks. From all indications, Bannister enjoyed what he saw of the university and Connecticut.

UConn is one of four schools that the 17-year-old high school senior visited on a nine-day trip to America. He also visited Rice University, Oklahoma State and Xavier of Ohio before coming to UConn Sunday night.

Bannister seemed pleased with what he saw at UConn. "The people here are very nice and all of them have been friendly," Bannister said. "I had a good time while I was here."

Bannister took all the attention he received in stride and acted like he had been through it all before. He drew many stares from people in the field house on Monday and Tuesday and even had his picture on the front of the Hartford Courant sports page Tuesday.

Bannister was brought on a short tour of Hartford on Monday. Highlights of the excursion included a meeting with Connecticut Gov. William O'Neill and a walking tour of the city.

Upon returning to campus, Bannister turned many heads with his basketball exhibition in the field house. UConn players Tim Coles and Gerry Besselink joined their guest in shooting and dunking practice. Bannister displayed a fairly decent outside shot and, of course, he dunked.

Boy, could he dunk.

At 7-foot-4, it doesn't take much effort to get the ball up through the hoop on a slam. Athletes like Coles and Besselink can get up there, but it takes a lot more effort than someone the size of Bannister.

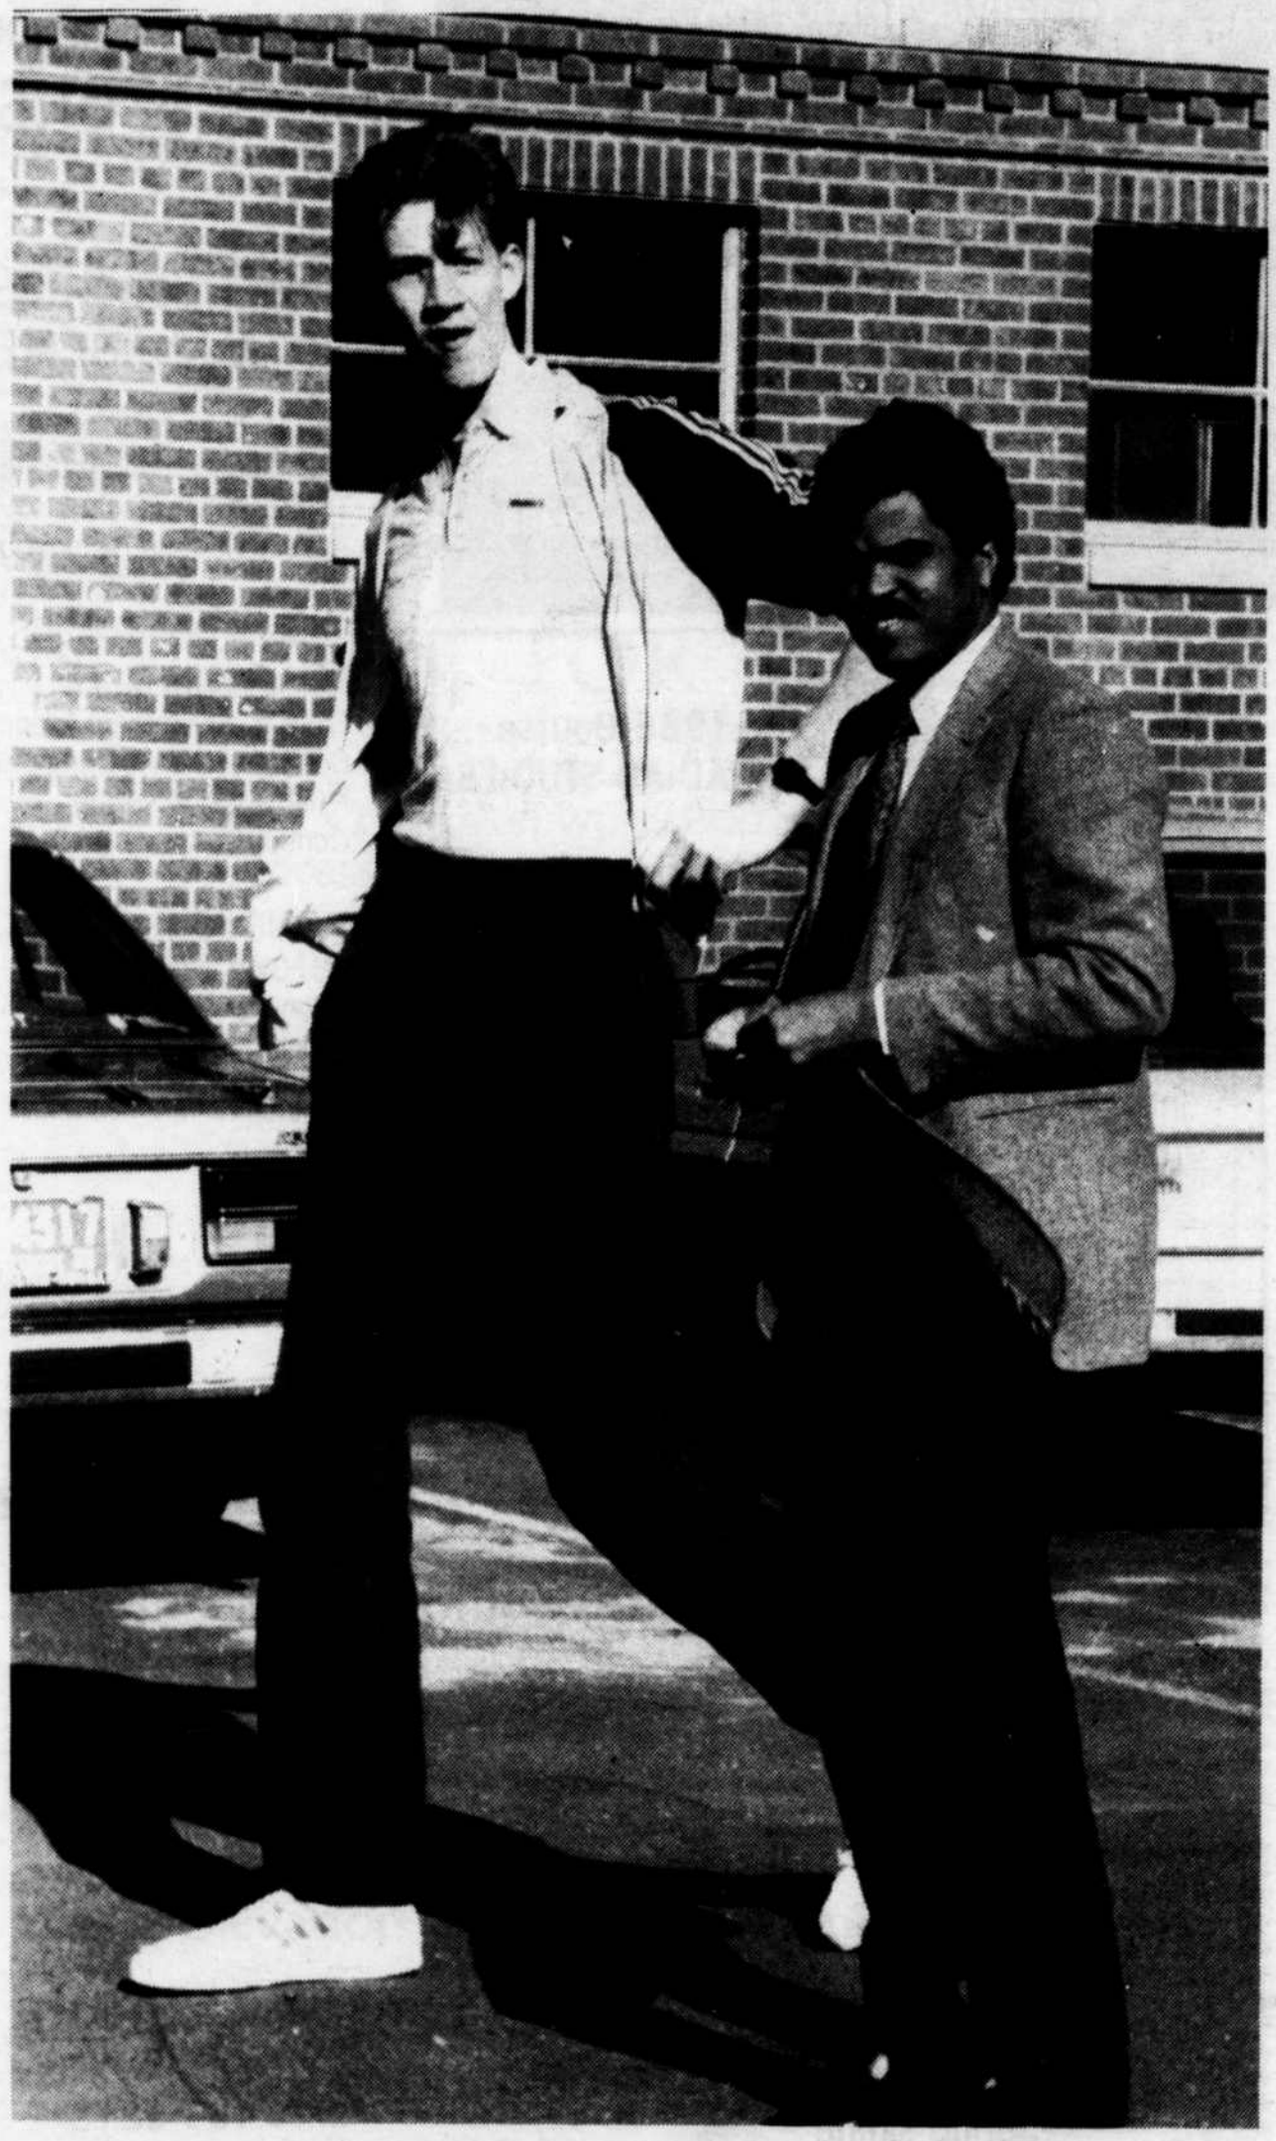
Bannister got a fairly good estimation of college life in the short time he was here. He ate breakfast with assistant coach Greg Ashford in McMahon and Ryan cafeterias on Monday and Tuesday, something which is not ordinarily done with recruits.

"We wanted Alan to get a feel of what college life is really like," Ashford said. "By eating in the dorm cafeterias, he got a chance to eat with people near his age and the environment was perhaps more comfortable for him."

Before leaving last night, Bannister met with head coach Dom Perno for a short time. He then headed to New York's Kennedy Airport for the flight back to England.

The line on the 247-pound Englishman is that he was averaging 35 points in a junior division league before moving up to the senior league and more challenging opponents. His team is named Warrington and his coach is former UConn guard Joe Whelton.

Perno has mentioned that Bannister can still improve in many areas of his game, but the center would obviously be a welcome addition to the team. Maybe it will be the cafeteria food that will put UConn at the top of his list.



Seven-foot-four Alan Bannister makes 6-foot-2 Gred Ashford, an assistant basketball coach at UConn, appear small walking next to him outside the field house Tuesday afternoon. Bannister, a high school senior from Manchester, England, is being recruited by UConn and was on campus for three days before returning to his native land (Mark Caswell photo).
